Survivors of sexual assault almost universally experience re-victimization at the hands of our culture, an environment that normalizes sexual violence and silences the voices of victims. In contemporary Western society, much of this re-victimization comes in the form of intimate wounding: blows to the spirit distinguished by their ability to cause spiritual injuries that strike at the core, the essence of a person. In this three hour presentation, the nature of intimate wounding, the physical, psychological, spiritual, secondary, and cultural wounding suffered by victims of interpersonal trauma, particularly sexual assault, will be discussed. The presenters will also identify several hopeful developments in combating the issue as well as implications for practice.
